Birth of a Nation

After the Revolution, the United States declared its independence from Britain. This led to a new nation, the United States of America, emerging from the British Empire. The Declaration of Independence was adopted on July 4, 1776, and it declared the separation of the colonies from Britain. The newly independent nation was founded on the principles of liberty, equality, and democracy. The American Revolution was a turning point in world history, as it gave rise to the modern concept of nation-states and democratic governance.